Not illustrated. 1852 Excerpt: ...And my meaning was, that since I saw you first after our separation--a child you were then... .And I put on my best stockings, to captivate you, I remember, Sir... You have had my heart ever since then, such as it was; and, such as you were, I cared for no other woman. What little reputation I have won, it was that you might be pleased with it: and, indeed, it is not much; and I think a hundred fools in the army have got and deserved quite as much. Was there something in the air of that dismal old Castlewood that made us all gloomy, and dissatisfied, and lonely under its ruined old roof? We were all so, even when together and united, as it seemed, following our separate schemes, each as we sate round the table. Dear, dreary old place! cries Beatrix. Mamma hath never had the heart to go hack thither since we left it, when--_ never mind how many years ago, and she flung back her curls, and looked over her fair shoulder at the mirror superbly, as if she said, Time, I defy you. Yes, says Esmond, who had the art, as she owned, of divining many of her thoughts. You can afford to look in the glass still; and only be pleased by the truth it tells you. As for me, do you know what my scheme is? I think of asking Frank to give me the Virginia estate King Charles gave our grandfather. (She gave a superb curtsey, as much as to say, Our grandfather, indeed! Thank you, Mr. Bastard.) Yes, I know you are thinking of my barsinister, and so am I. A man cannot get over it in this country; unless, indeed, he wears it across a.
